When a disaster strikes, community volunteer organizations usually seek out the support of the United Methodist Church because of its well-known reputation for disaster response. The support our congregations provide often comes in the form of disaster kits: everything from hygiene kits to soot sponge kits to school supply kits. At the time of annual conference, the OR-ID supply of disaster kits was dangerously low. Although the situation may have improved by the time you read this, the reality is that we can always use more kits.
